A wealthy man had an urge to have a grandchild. He had four daughters and four sons, all married, but as yet none of them had gratified his desire for a grandchild.

At the annual family gathering on Thanksgiving Day, he chided them gently for their failure to bless his old age with their progeny.

"But I haven't given up hope," he said. "Yesterday I went to the bank and set up a one hundred thousand dollar trust fund to be given to the first grandchild that I have. Now we will all bow our heads while I say a prayer of thanks."

When he looked up, he and his wife were the only ones at the table.
